THE 17th ANNUAL CHARLOTTESVILLE OPEN was held on July 14-15 at the Best Western Cavalier Inn. Attendance was down from previous years, probably due to a schedule conflict with the Maryland Open on the same weekend, but 48 players still showed up to compete. Noteworthy among them was master Paul Whitehead, returning after a decade's absence from tournament play. We hope to see him in future events! A special treat was the presence of Sigurd (Sig) Smith of Sig's Chess, who provided a level of book and equipment vending normally reserved for much larger tournaments.

A 4th round draw between Whitehead and reigning Va Scholastic Champion left four players with 3½ points going into the final round. Expert Daniel Arceo had already committed to a 5th round bye, leaving Whitehead, Balasubramanian, and North Carolinian Gilbert Holmes to play the top boards, along with Expert Tim Rogalski from the 3-point group. Balasubramanian duly defeated Rogalski to claim at least a share of 1st. Then Whitehead took care of business against the heavily outrated Holmes (750 points!) thus producing a two-way tie at 4½.

STORYBOOK ENDING

by Tim Rogalski

NE OF THE GREATEST CHESS WRITERS, World Champion candidate J H Donner, authored a collection of extremely entertaining articles entitled, The King: Chess Pieces. Donner embarrassed and infuriated many of his readers, and he himself explained why. He stated that humor does not come across very well in print; however, many of his articles had me laughing and grinning ear-to-ear, probably because I wasn't the object of his attacks! His work provoked several libel lawsuits and caused Donner to be ostracized by the Netherlands chess authorities, yet these very same caustic articles prevented many a fledging chess magazine from being sucked into the black-hole of oblivion. Donner was a fearsome journalist and no one was safe from his vitriolic acid pen. After he suffered a debilitating stroke, he wrote his best awardwinning works using only one finger with his good eye only inches from his manual typewriter. First, read the reviews, and then find the unabridged version.

TIMOTHY ROGALSKI - ALMARIO BERNARDINO 2005 ATLANTIC OPEN, WASHINGTON DC FRENCH

1 e4 Nc6 2 Nf3 e6 3 d4 Nf6 4 Nbd2 d5 5 e5 Ne4 6 c3 f5 7 exf6 Nxf6 [The position we have reached is a stunted version of the French Tarrasch. Black is cramped since he has not achieved the freeing c7-c5xd4 pawn formation. White proceeds with simple developing moves. 8 Bd3 Bd6 9 0-0 0-0 10 Re1 Qe8 11 Nf1 Qh5 12 Ng3 Bxg3 13 fxg3! [I took away from the center because I was worried about possible rook sacs on f3 after the f6-knight goes to g4. To my pleasant surprise, the human-thinking Rybka 2.3.2a concurs, while the enervated Fritz still rationalizes like a silicon-plated machine and mechanically captures toward the center. BTW, Rybka outright won the 15th World Computer Chess Championship with a crushing and undefeated score of 10/11. Days later the program's author, American IM Rajlich, while proudly conjoined to his brain-child like a Siamese Twin, outright won the 6th CSS/Pal Freestyle Tournament with an undefeated score of 6/9. (Participants of a "freestyle" tournament are keen centaurs, where the human plays with the aid of a supercomputer.) Rybka's 3100+ rating is 800 points greater than her creator, and unlike Hollywood's portrayal, if you ever read Mary Shelley's Frankenstein, then you know that the tormented and disfigured creature was more intelligent than his creator. Some monsters are made from dead body parts, others are made from silicon. 13...Bd7 14 Bf4 Rac8 15 Qc2 Nd8 16 Re5 [I wanted to double rooks on the e-file and was happy to accomplish this with tempo, but the sharper 16 Ng5! was winning; 17 Nxh7! is threatened and all the tricky lines work in White's favor because the Black queen is too exposed on h5. 16...Qe8 17 Ng5 g6 18 Rae1 Nh5 19 Bc1 Ng7?! [Black is forced to move the knight because of the threat of 20 Nxh7, but he should have gone to f6 to prevent White's next. 20 Rxd5 exd5 21 Rxe8 Rxe8 [I thought that 21...Bxe8 was better to provide extra support to g6. 22 Bf4 22 Nxh7!? could have been played one move earlier than in the game. The tactics work for White after 22...Re1+ 23 Kf2 Rxc1 24 Nf6+ Kf7 25 Qxc1 Kxf6 26 Qf4+ Ke7 27 Qg5+ Kf8 28 Bxg6 with a position similar to the game except that White would have a light squared bishop instead of a dark squared one. 22...Nde6? [Had Black played the better 22...Bf5, you would never have seen this game submitted for publication. 23 Nxh7! Kxh7 24 Bxg6+ Kg8 25 Bxe8 Bxe8 [This time, 25...Rxe8 was slightly more accurate. 26 Be5 (diagram)

The centrally supported bishop is both herculean and untouchable. White has Q+3Ps vs R+2Ns and is clearly winning. His army stands fully coordinate while Black's pieces step on each other's toes. White's assessment will improve with each step made by the passed pawns.

26...b6 27 g4 [It is generally good to create separation between doubled pawns by advancing the foremost pawn. Notice that the g4-pawn is best shape in relation to the poorly-placed g7 knight, which is without a move. 27...c5 28 dxc5 bxc5 29 h4 Rd8 30 h5 Bxh5?! [30...d4 was Black's best practical chance but White's phalanx of passed pawns are unstoppably too strong. 31 gxh5 Nxh5 [Notice that the centralized bishop is best shape in relation to the edged h5 knight. 32 g4 Nhg7 33 Qb3 Kh7 [Black simply loses a piece after 33...d4? 34 Bxg7] 34 Qc2+ Kg8 35 Bf6 [Just testing the waters to allow Black leeway to go wrong. 35...Rd6 36 Qb3 Kf7 37 Be5 Rd7 38 Qb5 [Now something has to give. 38... Ke7 39 Bxg7 [Computer programs evaluate the esoteric 39 Bf6+!? Ke8 40 g5 as better but humans think like humans, feel like humans, and therefore play human moves. 39...Nxg7 40 Qxc5+ Ke8 41 Kg2 Ne6 42 Qe3 Ke7 43 Qe5 [Queens are strongest when centralized. 43...d4 44 cxd4 Rxd4 45 Kf3 Rd3+ 46 Ke2 [The king had no reason to fear entering the thick of the fight with 46 Ke4] 46...Rd4 [Black should be thinking about trying to construct a fortress, however flimsy that might be. It was best to inhibit the advance of the g-pawn and play for tricks with 46...Rd5!, when White might fall for a cheapo knight fork. 47 g5 Rg4 48 Of6+ Kd6 49 g6 a5 [Too bad for Black that the e6-knight is pinned.]

50 Kd3 Rg5? [Whoops!] 51 Qxg5 1-0 Played with a loud crunch! Now if Black recaptures, then both the Black king and knight can only watch on helplessly, and in a manner reminiscent to something that happened in one of Donner's best article, the "Sweet Little Thing" (g-pawn) gaily prances to g7, then g8, where it metamorphically promotes to a queen. The g-pawn ascends into heaven, and the queen lives happily ever after in paradise and eternal bliss. The End 1-0

J'ADOUBE

Rob Pilaud writes in with a correction to Mike Atkins' report on the Springfield Open (Virginia Chess #2007/3). There we stated that Unrated prizewinner Brian Perez-Daple was the only unrated player in the field, but Rob points out that he too was a newcomer playing in his first official chess tournament.

ANALYTIC QUESTION

Another email comes from Richard Runke – well, actually the message wasn't signed, but I infer from the return address that it was from Richard Runke, who has contributed material to Virginia Chess in the past. In any case, the correspondent cites the game Yermolinski-Kaidanov from the recent US Championship as having been played "in the style of a club level clash," and asks, "Can you explain the thought and planning around move 16? Would your readers not find this interesting?"

ALEX YERMOLINSKY - GREGORY KAIDANOV 2007 US CHAMPIONSHIP, STILLWATER OKLAHOMA

15...Qe6

16 Bb4 was certainly a more direct attacking try. Since White ultimately lost, he clearly erred somewhere along the way and perhaps his 16th was indeed a misstep. However, nothing is certain after the bishop move. True, Black doesn't look good in the event of 16...Nxd3 17 Qf8+ Kg6 18 Rxd3 and his exposed king (and in particular, the threat Rg3+ followed by Qxg7) means more than whatever confusion Black might sow by taking c4 with his queen. But it seems he can hang tough with either 16...Nd7 (perhaps followed by ...Qe8 and then untangling the back rank, Nh6 etc) or 16...b6 with Bb7 possibly to come. Black's game looks cramped and awkward to be sure, but that is the lot he chose, deliberately, when he played the opening as he did, grabbing the d-pawn.

As for why Yermolinky preferred 16 Ng3, in the absence of definitive analytic reasons we can only speculate. White's compensation for the pawn is Black's messed up development. Sometimes this leads to a direct attack (as 16 Bb4 would try to demonstrate) but other times the most effective course for the aggressor in such situations is simply to keep improving the placement of his own pieces. Black may not be able to respond in kind and, ironically, the very absence of direct threats can complicate his task. There's a natural tendency to want to simplify by trading pieces and so forestall the Big Attack, but such simplification may in fact favor the better developed side since the pieces eliminated include Black's few (or only) developed units. Here, for instance, given his insecure king you might think Black would jump at a chance to trade queens in the diagram position. But if we imagine him going ...Qe8, and White responding by just allowing the trade and recapturing Rxd8, we see that in removing the queens we got rid of Black's most effective piece, whereas now he's still tied up on the back rank and has even further developed White's game by clearing the way for the king's rook to follow its brother in moving to d1.

We can't know for certain what concrete variations Yermolinsky may have seen or overlooked, or what was his overall estimation of each side's chances at this point. Certainly he would have considered the possibility 16 Bb4. Probably he did not find a clear knockout there and so preferred to simply mobilize one of his less active pieces.

Greetings Chess Fans!

Y want to extend you a personal invitation to the 2007 annual Southwest Virginia Open.

I played in this tournament last year, and it was one of my most enjoyable chess events in recent memory. The mountain views were spectacular, and the chess was on the same level.

This year I will be serving as chief tournament director rather than playing. I have also taken up the cause of promoting this fantastic event. The board of Roanoke Valley Chess Club has been working closely with me to make this year one for the record books. We anticipate a strong turnout.
